“The main bedroom, with panoramic views, certainly has the wow factor.”

ABOVE: WOMAG supplied the beautiful marble-look porcelain tiles for the flooring in this modern home. The product supplied was the Bianco Arabescato porcelain tile. Established in 1992, WOMAG enjoys the reputation as South Africa’s preferred supplier of natural stone and porcelain tiles for flooring and surface applications.

RIGHT: The brief received by DH Architecture was to create a space that takes advantage of the magnificent views over False Bay. This was achieved through the use of large, glazed, double-volume panels, recessed by cantilevered canopies. Simple, contemporary lines were incorporated throughout, in contrast to the detailed ceiling features.

Upon entering this home, one word immediately comes to mind: space. And that is precisely the reason this family of five chose to build here. “We were in a flat before, which was far too small. The children need a large area to play,” explains the owner.

Originally from Egypt, the family built this four-storey, four-bedroomed spacious home with just that in mind. They decided to decorate their home themselves. “For example, my husband chose the detailed tiled flooring,” says the owner. With their hard work, the result is a minimalistic design incorporating clean lines and a neutral palette dotted with rainbow hues in the form of furniture and art.

The main bedroom certainly has the wow factor. With a huge dressing room, a generous bathroom and a luxurious daybed overlooking the panoramic views of the area, it is the ultimate place to relax and unwind.

Incorporating extensive glass work into the design, this home is open, airy and bright. Their children were clearly at the forefront when planning and designing the property. A large, sparkling pool, and an extensive garden dressed in artificial grass take the hassle out of costly garden upkeep. Being eco-conscious was also an important consideration, hence the large water tanks that the family have included in their planning.

The family are big entertainers and their modern, fully equipped kitchen allows them to cook up a storm. “I love cooking, but I also like relaxing in the living area,” says the owner. “I like watching the children ride their bikes, through the windows,” she adds. 🏡
